Good evening everyone.

I'm Alex, Jacob's best man, former college roommate, and the guy who spent freshman year learning that a "quick shower" for Jacob means a full rendition of 90s hits.

I promised to keep this PG for the grandparents, so I'll just say: Jacob's legendary dad jokes started long before he earned the title.

He met Emily at a neighborhood trivia night five years ago. He spilled a drink; Emily handed him napkins—with her number. That's not romance, that's efficiency.

Two years later they moved in, adopted a cat named Pixel who runs the household, and last fall Jacob proposed in Napa, where the only thing drier than the cabernet was, once again, his jokes.

What I love about these two is how they work as a team.

On hikes, Emily sets the pace while Jacob claims he's "protecting the rear flank," which we all know means he's out of breath.

At trivia, Emily carries the board and Jacob confidently answers every question that starts with "Scientists say..."

And whether they're testing new taco spots or rescuing animals, they show up for each other and for everyone around them—kind, steady, and quietly unstoppable.

Emily, you make Jacob sharper and braver.

Jacob, you make Emily laugh even when she pretends she's immune.

Together you've built something real: shared calendars, shared snacks, and a shared mission to collect as much pet hair as humanly possible.

So, to keep this brief—Grandma, I see you eyeing the dance floor—please raise your glasses.

To Emily and Jacob: to their kindness, their teamwork, their hikes without blisters, their trivia nights without spills, and tacos forever.
Cheers!
