Good evening, everyone.

First, thank you to our hosts for bringing us together tonight, and welcome to the Walker family—we're grateful to be joining our stories with yours.

I'm Sarah's twin brother—equal parts teammate and friendly rival—and I've had a front-row seat to the version of Sarah who never backs down from a finish line, a puzzle, or a plan. So when she met James at a charity 5K five years ago, I paid attention. It wasn't just that they crossed the same start line; it was how quickly they began running at the same pace.

That summer's first trip to the coast told me a lot. The two of them in kayaks, steady strokes, scanning the water—curious, calm, in sync. Since then, I've watched their weekends fill with the sorts of things that reveal character: pausing true-crime podcasts to debate theories with actual evidence; nursing sourdough starters like they're living history; and turning a house into a home one careful, slightly over-researched DIY project at a time.

Two years in, they adopted a golden retriever who, frankly, has become the most patient witness to their podcast arguments. Last year, they bought their first home. And this spring, at our family cabin—where our best stories begin and end—James proposed. It was fitting: a quiet place, thoughtful timing, and a promise made in a setting that has always meant steadiness to us.

James, you respect Sarah's mind as much as her heart. Sarah, you meet James's steadiness with your own fearless intention. Together, you're practical and bold, kind and exacting—a partnership built on effort that looks, from the outside, wonderfully effortless.

Tonight, we celebrate what brought us here; tomorrow, we celebrate what comes next. Sarah, James—may the rhythm you've found carry into every mile ahead. I'm proud to stand with you both.
